doc file contains the upgrade information. [www.nowosad.com] To the editors: We read with great interest the article by Blewitt et al. [1] and think that it is very important to emphasise the risk of silent corrosion in pediatric patients. Infants may be especially prone to this. If silent corrosion occurs in the upper urinary tract, permanent damage may occur in the future. We agree with the authors and hope that the results of the manuscript will motivate pediatric urologists to carefully monitor pediatric patients for silent corrosion. New: New version can be seen here: We like to thank the authors of the review article [2] for their statement about the vulnerability of medical devices to bacterial colonization. The authors emphasize the need for reliable patient history taking and point out that after colonization the presence of Candida albicans does not mean that the ventilation system is defective. Changed: Changed version can be seen here: We agree with the authors of the review article [2] that the growth of different Candida species depends on the composition of the environment. Candida species in the oral cavity, especially C. albicans, are associated with poor oral hygiene and can be detected in the oral cavity of patients treated with mechanical ventilation. Candida species in the environment may be transmitted by nebulizers or masks and are removed from the airways with a change of the mask or its cleaning [3]. This is probably the reason why the prevalence of Candida colonization of the skin in patients treated with mechanical ventilation is low [4]. In contrast, 82157476af
